I blame the horse, the dog and the ox for their meddling. Let me explain. In the Howling Desert at the beginning of time, I used to laze in the sunshine and had kept myself very much to myself. However, to my great disappointment, I was always being bothered by the others-the horse, dog and ox. Constantly they would nag me to work, they would beg and plead and stamp their feet but I paid them little attention for why should I work when they can do double the workload in my place. I had come up with a cunning plan to only answer their protests with a solitary 'humph.' This angered them greatly; their faces looked like volcanoes ready to explode. One day, I noticed them deep in conversation about me, yet again they were complaining about having to do my workload and bitterness coated their voices, like sand covering the desert.
I have written in the first person	Filling with idleness, I refused to move an inch.
I have written in the past perfect tense	I had listened to them complaining for long enough. For I long time, I had done nothing, no work whatsoever. Staring aghast, I had come to the conclusion that the hideous hump protruding from my back was now a permanent feature.
I have varied sentence openers	You won't believe... Can you imagine... Not only...but...
I have used deliberate vocabulary choices	With a heavy heart... Staring in stupefied astonishment... Incredulously, I
Use reported speech	The Djinn had told me that since I refused to work, I would from this day forward carry a heavy burden on my back. The animals had asked me to do my work but I had refused.

Use imagery	My voice broke, like a fishing line. His words stung, like a thousand bees. His words washed over me like a wave.
Use inference (show not tell)	My cheeks flushed scarlet. Stamping my hooves, I ...
End your letter	Can you believe how badly I have been treated by these despicable creatures? Yours sincerely, Mr A. Camel
